Nation Totals at Least Ninety Violent Deaths

AUTOS CAUSE 50

A Quiet Fourth Is Reported for the Hope Area

Police reports showing everything to be quiet and no accidents or violent deaths in the Hope area, combined to make Thursday one of the quietest holiday celebrations in history.

In a pre-holiday accident Tex Glasscock, 23, of Winsboro, La., suffered the loss of his left leg Wednesday afternoon when he was caught in the wheels of a Missouri Pacific freight train west of Hope near Luck's Tourist Court.

He was rushed to Josephine hospital where his leg had to be amputated.

Hospital physicians reported that Glasscock was getting along well and would probably be moved to his home in Winsboro Friday.

Four persons escaped injury Friday when a car belonging to Mrs. Fleniken of Fort Worth, Texas, left the pavement about three miles west of Hope on Highway 67, to avoid hitting a truck loaded with hay. The truck belonged to D. J. Bunch of Texarkana. The Fleniken car was slightly damaged.

5 Objectives of World Peace Are Outlined by F. D.

Disarmament Still World Hope, President Declares

AMERICA ARMING

World Needs "Freedom from Fear," He Declares

HYDE PARK—(AP)—Five objectives which must be realized before permanent world peace can be assured were listed by President Roosevelt Friday.

First among them he put freedom from fear, and that, he said, means disarmament.

The discussion came at a time when Europe is fighting a bloody war, and the United States is embarking on a vast defense program under the president's personal direction.

This is how he listed the objectives: Freedom from fear; freedom of information; freedom of religion; freedom of expression; freedom from want.

Nashville to Get Canning Factory

Plan to Put Up Peaches and Tomatoes This Year

NASHVILLE — Charles Robertson of Stockton, Calif., has arrived in the city with machinery to start the proposed canning here, and expects to have it in operation in sufficient time to can Elberta peaches and tomatoes produced here this year.

Mr. Robertson met with the canning factory committee of the Nashville Chamber of Commerce last Tuesday to consider a location for the plant and work out other details connected with the construction of the canning building.

Bill Cain of Fayetteville, district manager for the American Can company, attended the meeting, and told the committee:

"The American Can Company has investigated Mr. Robertson thoroughly, and we are ready to back him up in every way; we will furnish the closing machinery, cans, labels, shipping boxes and pay for that and will furnish seed for crops of beans, tomatoes, spinach, etc., and furnish all the fertilizer needed." He said that a large broker had asked for the entire output of this canning, and said that the quality of merchandise on which Mr. Robertson has built his good reputation would insure prompt sale of his product.

Will Czarot, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, was instructed to see all who had agreed to take stock in the building to be erected, and see that checks for these subscriptions. The money must be collected immediately so that construction of the building can be started at once.

Townsendites to Oppose 3rd Term

Resolution Endorsed by Convention at St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, Mo. —(AP)—In a resolution proposed by Dr. Francis E. Townsend, pension plan founder, the national Townsend convention went on record Thursday as "irrevocably opposed to a third term for any president of the United States."

In the tumult that followed introduction of the resolution, Frank C. Smith of East St. Louis, Ill., said, "I am opposed to a third term, but with the condition of the world as it is now, how can we change horses in midstream?"

Rev. J. B. Buckley of Akron, O., replied: "Whenever we elect a man to a third term, we are establishing a dangerous precedent."

S. M. Williams of St. Louis began a speech charging Weir had "railroaded" the resolution. He was shouted down.

Representative Hamilton Fish (Rep., N. Y.) congratulated the convention on its stand and said: "I would not be for a third term even for George Washington or Abraham Lincoln."

LOS ANGELES—(AP)—More attention to "seasonal surpluses" of vegetables will help the farmer and the nation's general food situation, says J. H. Holland, representative of the federal Surplus Commodities Corporation. Holland appealed to the public to buy vegetables when they are plentiful.

Willkie's Liberal Heritage Stems From 1848 Exodus as Prussians Took Germany

Here's Story of Unpolitical Man G.O.P. Nominated

Feels Like Private Who Woke Up in General's Tent

BACK IN INDIANA

From Farm Boy to Nomination for President

Where did Wendell Willkie come from and how did he get where he is? This is the first of six articles answering those questions and telling the story of the Republican presidential nominee's life.

By TOM WOLF

NEA Service Staff Correspondent

There's an old army story about a certain Private Jones who spent one night in Paris in the suite of a top-ranking general.

Next morning the general's orderly awakened Jones to a day that was full of surprises.

Willkie's mother, the late Henrietta Trisch Willkie.

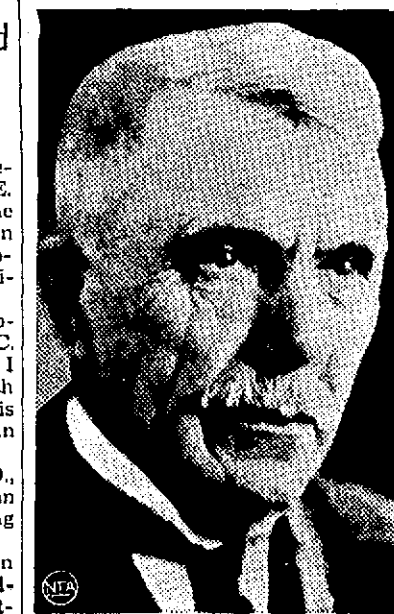

Everywhere he went, officers and men alike jumped to snap the salute to Private Jones.

Around noon, thoroughly confused by this unaccustomed display of universal respect, Jones sat down to think it over.

A sudden thought brought beads of sweat to the private's forehead. "Gosh," he gasped, remembering he had shared the general's suite, "they must have waked the wrong man!"

These simple, incredulous feelings are undoubtedly shared by the stocky, tousle-haired, self-styled "Indiana farmer" who over-night was boomed to standard bearer of the Republican party—Wendell Lewis Willkie.

His Horatio Algerian career began all but literally atop an Indiana crack-corn box.

Willkie's father, the late Herman Willkie.

He was probably the only American boy whom no one told in his youth that some day he would be President of the United States.

In his earliest youth "Winn" Willkie was awakened poetically. It was the custom of grand, erudite Herman Willkie to call his fur sons and two daughters in the morning by reciting long, pertinent passages of

A club guest Friday was Tom Compton, Prescott Rotarian.

BULLETINS

LONDON —(AP)— The French charge d'affaires in London protested to the foreign office Friday over British action against the French fleet in the Mediterranean.

The protest was submitted on behalf of the Pétain government by Roger Cabon, who has been in charge of the embassy since Ambassador Charles Corbin resigned last week.

LITTLE ROCK —(AP)— State treasurer Earl Page announced Friday the quarterly turnback to the counties from the state six-and-one-half-cent gallon gasoline tax would total $313,270.24. Warrants will be mailed to county treasurers about July 10, he said.

The counties included: Hempstead $4,452.90.

LONDON —(AP)— German-controlled Radio in a broadcast heard here reported Friday that the 15,363-ton French liner Massilia, which left Bordeaux June 16 with former French Premier Edouard Daladier aboard, is overdue and missing.

Call Extra Police for Mexican Poll

Almazan Challenging Camacho, Machine Candidate

MEXICO CITY —(AP)— Receiving reports of minor pre-election disturbances in scattered sections of Mexico, officials prepared for Sunday's presidential voting by calling out 3,000 military college students Thursday to help 5,000 soldiers keep order. Officials insisted no serious disturbances were expected.

Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho, backed by the administration, and Gen. Juan Andreu Almazan, leading a national unification party, are chief opponents. Others in the race are Gen. Rafael Sanchez Tapia and Romon de la Paz, Lower California druggist.

Kassalla Is Taken by Rome; France's Fleet Is Smashed

British Destroy or Capture It on Fourth of July

ALLIES FALL OUT

British Quickly Pound French Ships to Pieces

ROME —(AP)— Capture of Kassalla, important post in the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, was reported Friday by the Italian high command.

Italian authorities said occupation of the post was extremely important from strategic, economic and political viewpoints.

The high command reported a formation of Italian fighting planes "carried out a brilliant machine-gun attack on the airfield of Haltar, Malta," and put out of action eight planes at this British Mediterranean naval base.

New Demands on Rumania

BUCHAREST —(AP)— Rumors that new Soviet demands on Rumania may be forthcoming circulated in the capital Friday as the new government of Premier Gurguta went into action to straighten out troubled internal conditions against which the Kremlin was said to be protesting.

In Budapest, reports that new Soviet troops and mechanized equipment had arrived in Bessarabia, province ceded to Russia by Rumania, sharpened tension in the Balkans and led to the belief that Moscow is planning new demands on Rumania.

British Take Fleet

LONDON —(AP)— Besieged Britain and vanquished France came to a parting of the diplomatic ways Friday, according to indirect word from the Pétain government, while the British navy combed world seas for French warships to consolidate Britain's control over the bulk of the French fleet. The Pétain regime was reported to have broken off relations because of the British move against the French navy, but the British still were not officially notified.

At home, on this island base facing a Hitler-dominated Europe the British fought against new German air attacks, now a daily routine, while in Africa Royal Air Force naval units and border garrisons in desert wastelands continued the as yet indecisive struggle against Italy.

Quiet in Egypt

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt —(AP)— British sources here Friday described the situation of the French fleet at Alexandria as "in abeyance." They said: "We do not know what will happen or when the French will make their decision. We only know that no French ship shall ever leave Alexandria to surrender to the enemy."

British naval circles expressed regret over fighting between French and English warships Thursday at Oran, Algeria, and hoped no such action would occur here.

British and French warships lying in the Alexandria harbor had a community interest in that they both were the objects of Italian planes Thursday in which 15 persons were killed and seven wounded.

Russia Explains

MOSCOW —(AP)— Paavola, the Communist party organ, said Friday Soviet "Defense preparations, and actions of the Red army in the northwest, west and south, are directed against plans of British and French warmongers," and are not directed against Germany.

Submarines Active

BERLIN —(AP)— Recent German sea raids have sunk British merchantmen totalling 106,543 tons, the high command reported Friday, as the government informed that the Nazi wedge between Britain and France had completely estranged the former allies.

British Smash French

LONDON —(AP)— British sources indicated Friday the royal navy has taken command of still more units of the French fleet after wresting the bulk of the warships of Britain's erstwhile ally from German and Italian grasp by battle and demand. The well-informed British Press Association said the additional vessels were taken into Scottish water to which they presumably came themselves.

The Daily Herald said "nearly 250 French warships, the greater part of What of the Indies Now?

The murk which overhangs Europe today is thick and impenetrable. It is impossible to know just what is going on. Events move with such lightning rapidity that it is hard to know where we've been, let alone where we are now.

The French island possessions in the western hemisphere are a good example. Technically, France still exists. There is some kind of a French government in Bordeaux which has signed an armistice ending France's part in the war. There is some kind of a French government in exile, like those of Holland and Belgium and Norway.

Which now controls the French islands in America? Does either control them in any practical way? Does either government, one under German domination, the other under the wing of the British, really represent the France that owned Martinique, Guadalupe, French Guiana, St. Pierre and Miquelon?

These are questions that are undoubtedly costing the U. S. State Department, as well as the corresponding offices in 20 other American governments, a lot of lost sleep. This is a situation which did not occur to anyone, which does not fit into any of our present-day policies.

Of course it cannot really be considered in any final way until peace is made between France and Germany on what passes in today's world for a permanent basis. What has been signed is merely a military armistice. What kind of a French government will emerge from that peace, whether it will have any of the attributes of genuine independence, we do not know. Japan, it should be noted, did not wait to find out, but has begun to deal with French Indo-China without regard to its relations to any French government.

But if it should be a Fascist French government, set up by the Germans as the Russians have set up theirs in the Baltic states, and as Japan has set up hers in China, it would be hard for the United States to think of the French islands in America as still belonging to the same France. Such a change might constitute a transfer from one European power to another in as real a sense as if the islands had passed to Germany. This need not be decided now, for the permanent relationships as set up by a definite peace treaty have not yet been set forth. But they will require the closest attention, and every effort to catch glimpses of the true situation through the murk which now beclouds European events.

WE THE WOMEN

How to See Yourself as Others See You

By RUTH MILLETT

A woman unconsciously decides what type of woman she is going to be by the way she spends her time.

If she spends as much time on her looks (or even half as much) as the beauty experts urge, she will be described as "beautiful," "good-looking," "well-groomed," or "young for her age." ("well-preserved" if the one describing her has no fondness for her).

If she is the kind of woman who finds time to read even if she doesn't find time for the beauty parlor as often as she should, she will most likely be described as "very intelligent."

If she finds time for all of her family's needs, but little for her own, the comment won't be on her looks or her brains, but she will be summed up as a "good mother" or a "splendid woman."

at a career, she'll be described as "successful" or at the worst dismissed with the word, "very efficient."

If she is crazy about people and would rather be at a party—preferably her own—than anywhere in the world, she will undoubtedly be described as either "charming" or "so much fun."

If she is bent on doing good in her community, she will probably be described as a "worker" by her neighbors and friends.

If her heart and soul are in her

If she spends most of her time feeling sorry for herself, she will be

A woman who wants to know how others think of her and sum her up has only to check back and see how she spends her time.

Lack of Rouble Lets Russian

In for Trouble

Around the troubles of Ivan Fomitch and the thesis that the lack of the rouble is the root of all evil, Creighton Scott has written his interesting novel of revolutionary Russia, "The Muscovite" (Scriveners, $2.50).

Not the heavy historical effort nor political preachment, its title would suggest, this novel is merely that of a rather un-Russian character with a typical Russian name, recounting his success in eluding most of the turmoil of the revolution around him.

Ivan reminds one little of the typical Russian because he is neither a bearded Bolshevik, a wild-haired Communist, a soap box orator, a peasant, nor a dancer. He is not opposed to bathing and doesn't give a fig who tries, the rouble or the people. He is merely a rouble-less graduate just out of the university with a craving for cigars equaled only by that of an American fraternity man.

He is possessed of one miserly brother who flinches at the loaning of a kopeck, and of the memory of another who died rather gruesomely in the cause of socialism with a bullet in his brain. Ivan's troubles are, in order, lack of roubles, job, likely conscription by the army and love for a married woman.

His brother finds him a clerk's job in a shipping firm, thus partly solving the rouble deficiency. Because he cannot buy his way out of the army, Ivan seeks the aid of Piotr, his medical student friend, whose flair for chemical experiment enables him to induce in Ivan a temporary disease worthy of military exemption.

To tell how Ivan meets the problem of romance would be giving away the best of the story. Suffice it to say his adventures only begin when he meets Penya. There is good reading here for any summer night.

Census figures show an increase of Indians in Arizona. The vanishing American takes a certain call to handle the jug and rug trade with the tourist trend being westward this year.

Sonja Henie Weds Rich New Yorker

Movie Skater, 27, Is Wealthy in Her Own Right

CHICAGO (AP)—Sonja Henie, star of the screen and skating rink, was married to Dan Topping, wealthy New York sportsman, Thursday. The ceremony was performed in the apartment of Arthur H. Wirtz, official of the Chicago Stadium, by Dr. Joshua Oden, pastor of the Irving Park Lutheran church, in the presence of a few friends of the couple and relatives of Miss Henie.

While their names had been linked romantically for more than six months, they became engaged in New York a week ago and came to Chicago last night.

Miss Henie wept during the ceremony. Her "I do's" were barely audible. The couple stood uncertainly for a moment after the nuptials were completed.

"Well, she's yours," prompted the clergyman.

Topping then gave his wife a kiss. Miss Henie composed herself quickly and the couple laughed and chatted as they posed for photographers.

It was the third marriage for Topping, former husband of Arlene Judge, motion picture actress. Topping, 28, who inherited a fortune made in the book industry, is owner of the Brooklyn team of the National Professional Football League. It was his first marriage to the Norwegian-born actress. She is 27 and wealthy.

British Seize Bulk of French Navy

A French battleship of the Bretagne class—the Bretagne is shown above—was sunk and other war vessels were set afire in a battle between the English Mediterranean navy and a portion of the French fleet off Oran, North African naval base. Prime Minister Churchill announced that Britain had seized the bulk of their former ally's fleet in the engagement which was necessary for England's retaining the superior force on the sea against Italy and Germany.

Here's Story of

Shakespeare into their sleepy ears. Many times since those days, Wendell Willkie has had occasion to wonder whether "they" waked the wrong man.

There was the day in his senior year at Indiana University when Wendell Willkie, the red-sweatered "socialist" who for four years had noisily led the student anti-fraternity faction, was tapped for Beta Theta Pi.

It was the smoothest, swankest, and all-around "best" of Indiana's fraternities.

Its undergraduate president was none other than the Democratic Apollon, young Paul V. McNutt.

Then there was the morning they waked the youthful Wendell Willkie—sleeping on an old cot in the lobby of a cheap Akron hotel—to give the green young lawyer, fresh back from the World War, a good job in the legal department of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company.

Or again, the day in 1926 when a prominent industrialist wrote a law firm: "Do not let this young man (Willkie) get away from us."

I think he is a corner and we should keep our eye on him."

A Pretty Good Raise

And there was that day in 1929 when the president of the great Commonwealth & Southern Corporation told the mature Wendell L. Willkie to figure out his income for the past three years. He directed Willkie to double that total.

That figure would be Willkie's annual salary if he would consent to become general counsel to the billion-dollar Commonwealth and Southern.

And when in 1933 Wendell Willkie found himself elected president of this potent, sprawling utility corporation, he is likely to have assumed his characteristic feet-on-desk position and pinched himself vigorously to make sure they hadn't "waked the wrong man."

Today Presidential Nominee Willkie, his keen mind darting—baleful through his astonishing career, may well take a moment out to wonder how it all began.

Story Begins in Germany

The story begins half a century before Wendell, the fourth of Herman and Henrietta Willkie's six children, was born on Feb. 18, 1892. And it begins in Germany—almost 5000 miles from Wendell's Elwood, Ind., birthplace.

In 1848, when German liberty was spiked under the pointed heel of Prussianism, two men and two women joined the thousands of other liberty-loving Germans who fled to the young, growing, free United States.

It is no accident that their grandson, Wendell Willkie, says today: "By nature and by upbringing, I am a liberal."

"By nature" his liberalism stems back to his grandparents—Trisch and Willeke (the original spelling). From his earliest youth this heritage has stood Wendell Willkie in good stead.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Job's Lessons Have Great Timeliness In View of Present World Conditions Text: Job 21-13

By WILLIAM E. GILROY, D. D. Editor of Advance

The lessons for the third quarter are found in messages from the poets and they begin with three lessons from the Book of Job.

These lessons have peculiar timeliness, in view of the present world situation of disaster and suffering in which the problems of Faith and Providence are greatly stressed.

It is true that the Book of Job deals with these things as they affect an individual, greatly afflicted and perplexed alike by his sufferings and by the quick and ready-made philosophies with which his friends tried to soothe and help him.

The problem becomes all the more acute when we see it on a vast scale where hundreds of thousands of lives are affected, and whole communities, and even countries, of innocent people are going down with the loss of their goods, the wiping out of the foundations of their daily living, and in many instances bodily injury or actual loss of life. Yet this vast problem of social disaster comes home to each individual as a problem that he inevitably faces for himself.

As of old, we meet the problem with vain questionings and with vain philosophies. "Why does God permit war?" men ask. A woman is reported as saying that if the Germans swept her faith in God, she would lose her faith in life. It is things of this sort that emphasize the problem which was present to the writer of the Book of Job, and the problem which is emphasized in our lesson which deals with Job's temptation to doubt God's goodness.

We should remember that the Book of Job is a poem, a drama, in which the questionings and answers are brought out through the action and discussion between the personalities. We are not reading the account of something that actually took place, although we are reading a poet's conception of what does really happen in some form in life.

The problem that Job confronted confronts every thoughtful individual. If he is personally assailed by similar afflictions, he is bound to have Job's questionings, and he will be fortunate if he does not have Job's doubts. If he is free from personal affliction, he must surely be blind to the sufferings of his fellowmen, and especially to what innocent people undergo of tragedy, if he is not moved to consider the problem of evil and the problem of pain.

"It is perhaps worth while to note that Job never found any real solution to this problem. What he did attain was an attitude of faith that enabled him to say, 'Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him.' It is doubtful whether there is any solution other than the solution of faith. It was in something of Job's spirit that Christ cried in His agony in the garden, 'Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass.' Yet, His supreme concern was that the will of God should be done, and He went to the Cross in the courage of faith, believing that it was God's way."

The mystery of suffering has never been made plain, and the solutions that modern optimists offer those in affliction are not much more satisfactory than those offered Job of old.

What does help us is the realization that men and women who have suffered greatly have lived lives of great usefulness and helpfulness to ward others, and that even where nations have suffered and perished, they have given to the world a heritage of truth and right and liberty.

what was the second biggest fleet in Europe, have fallen into British hands.

The seizure of the other ships was announced in the House of Commons by Prime Minister Churchill.

With tears in his eyes and his voice tight in pride and sorrow, Churchill told Commons how with "aching hearts" the British government had seen to it that the French surrender cabinet of Marshal Petain did not carry out its promise to turn its battle vessels over to Germany.

He reported:

In a 10-minute action Thursday off Oran and Mers el-Kebir, Algeria, British guns sank a French battleship of the Bretagne class; damaged and grounded a battle cruiser of the Stars class; sank or set on fire two destroyers and France's only aircraft carrier, the 10,000-ton Commandant Tente; torpedoed an escaping battle cruiser, probably the Dunkerque.

(The Strasbourg and Dunkerque are listed by most authorities as battle ships, although Churchill called them battle cruisers.)

Before this happened, Churchill disclosed, a great flotilla of French warships entered the English ports of Sheerness, Plymouth and Portsmouth. These included:

Two battleships; two light cruisers; a number of submarines including the 2,880-ton Surcouf, the world's largest; eight destroyers and 200 mine-sweeping and anti-submarine craft.

At Alexandria, Egypt, the British seized control of a French battleship, four French cruisers and several smaller ships—vessels that only a few years before had joined the British in fighting off the Italian air raid.

French Fleet Reduced

Thus, it appeared that only one active capital ship was left to France. Presumably this was the Dunkerque, which with some smaller ships fled from Oran for Toulon. Churchill said that mighty vessel would be out of action for months, crippled by one British torpedo.

That engagement was carried out without interference from Italian war vessels.

"The Italian fleet," he said, "kept prudently out of the way," adding: "We shall take the necessary steps to maintain command of the Mediterranean."

(From Geneva there had been reports that the Italian fleet was speeding to the aid of the French.)

A final rupture of diplomatic relations with the Petain government was predicted.

(Indications that the French had started such a move were seen in a dispatch from Vichy, France, to Berlin which said that the French foreign minister had told United States Ambassador William C. Bullitt of France's "utmost indignation," asking that President Roosevelt be informed.

(The Italian news agency Stefani reported that the French government had ordered attack on any British ship or plane coming within 12 miles of her coast. (It was reported that Petain would reply to Churchill.)

German Enraged

BERLIN (AP)—Enraged by the British fleet's destruction of French naval units, Germans declared Thursday night the French navy has Hitler's permission to scuttle its warships remaining at large or do as it pleases to avoid British seizure.

DNE, official German news agency, said the Petain government of France had informed the German Armistice Commission of its intention to sink French warships if they are attacked and unable to escape.

German commentators attacked at the British because of the rage off Oran. In the armistice agreement, Germany promised that surrendered units of the French fleet would be interned and not used against the British.

HARRISON IN HOLLYWOOD

By PAUL HARRISON, NEA Service Correspondent

Ritz Brothers, Having Gone From Bad to Wurtzel, Launch New Ritzkrieg

HOLLYWOOD — All persons who may be planning to visit Hollywood hereby are warned that the Ritz Brothers are at large again. Proceed at your own risk.

It makes no difference that Movieland is extensive in area and that there really are only three Ritzes. These boys get around. They're the gargoyles on the Union Station, the corpses of Clover Club suicides, and the whitewings at Hollywood Park. They're the shills in rubberneck buses, the double-talking pan-handlers in front of the Brown Derby, and the talent scouts who'll flag down an out-of-state automobile in the middle of Hollywood Boulevard and offer $5000-a-week movie contracts to each of the tourists.

At night clubs, they're the thumb in your soup, the insulting head waiter, and the chef with a cleaver who goes around looking for the patron who complained about the steak. If you leave one spot while they're singing a song—having taken over the floor show for their own amusement—you're likely to find them half an hour later doing a strip tease in a joint five miles away. The Ritz Brothers are not subtle workers, but they are fast.

By day, the comedians now are fairly safely isolated at Universal, where they are playing in a film called "Argentine Nights." They were assigned a dressing room bungalow adjacent to the studio hospital, and used to keep them quiet. Jim, Harry, and Al immediately went next door, to cheer the sick with a few dirges, and discovered that the establishment is just an infirmary and never has any in-patients.

Vigilant Against Ritzkrieg

Since production has only just begun, the brothers have had little chance to plan a Ritzkrieg against other companies on the lot, but directors and producers are grimly vigilant. Everyone remembers what happened when the triumvirate invaded and demoralized 20th-Fox. Not even the dignity of Darryl Zanuck was safe from outrage. The occupation lasted three years and was ended only making a couple of pictures so bad that the Ritzes were ashamed to be seen in them.

There was quite a bit of story trouble toward the last, but the brothers hung on until Zanuck called in Sol Wurtzel, his Class B generalissimo. "Pack Up Your Troubles" and "The Gorilla" followed. After the second disastrous preview, Harry Ritz called his brothers together and said, "Gentlemen, things have gone from bad to Wurtzel." That night they slipped quietly over the border of Movietown City.

Return to Lead in "Argentine Nights"

A few months ago, having been engaged for two pictures by Universal, the Ritz Brothers began to look like incorrigible rebels when they walked out of roles in "The Boys From Syracuse." But an arbitration committee upheld them when it developed that they had been promised leading parts and that these parts weren't.

So now they're in "Argentine Nights" and the Ritzes are the principal characters without question. It's a zany piece about three heart-of-gold screwballs who are trying to get jobs for girls' band. The opening shows a convention of Ritz creditors, assembled in a theater, who look on as if hypnotized while the singing, clowning trio evacuate the cuties and instruments during a rousing production number called "The Spirit of 77-B" (a clause of the Bankruptcy Act).

Units Sentiment Grows For Independent Air Corps

WASHINGTON — Under the surface of the drive for a stronger air force, there is developing new sentiment for getting the service flying out from under the direction of non-flying generals and admirals.

So far there is not much talk about setting up the air force as a completely separate arm on the British style, with its own department headed by its own cabinet member. But the possibility of giving both the army and navy flying corps virtual independence within the existing departments is being explored.

Two congressmen who are starting to work in that direction are Vincent H. Hargrove and Melvin Maas of Minnesota. Hargrove is interested in the army. Maas in the navy; general idea is to make the air arm of each service an independent corps, like the marine corps, under the orders of the head of the department but carrying its own general staff and top command.

Shy Away From Separate Force

Men close to the military picture here are still inclined to shy away from the idea of a wholly separate air force. This includes some of the most out-spoken critics of the inability of present army and navy high commands to realize the full value of the airplane as a military weapon.

Chief reason for this is a feeling that flying a fighting plane for the army is an entirely different thing than flying one for the navy, and that each branch of the service should have an air corps whose personnel is especially trained for its own problems. The alleged recent experience of the British in Norway is cited as a case in point.

According to a story which is accepted as true by men qualified to judge, there was lamentable lack of co-ordination between Britain's sea fleet and her air arm in the Norwegian fighting. Flyers are said to have gone to the Norwegian coast to drive off German surface ships without adequate information about the numbers or types of British vessels operating in the same waters. Being landmen, they could not readily distinguish British vessels from German. Result, it is said, is that British flyers bombed British warships, with disastrous consequences.

Hence the Maas-Hargrove approach.

Action May Be Near on Alaskan Highway

If the President should decide hemisphere defense made it necessary to speed construction of the proposed highway to Alaska, the way is just about open for immediate action.

Congress recently passed a law extending the life of the International Highway Commission for four years. This group, headed by energetic Congressman Warren Magnuson of Washington, has almost finished the preliminary work. By July, all of the

Texas Pair Takes Hot Springs Races

Herman and Charles Mayhew Carry Off Top Honors

HOT SPRINGS — Approximately 6,000 persons watched Herman Mayhew and his brother, Charles, of Dallas, Tex., carry off top honors in the annual Fourth of July regatta sponsored by the Hot Springs Chamber of Commerce on Lake Hamilton Thursday.

There were nine races. In none did the Mayhew brothers finish worse than third. Herman, performer outclassed that of other drivers. Securing a total of 2,600 points for what is believed to be a new high, he won $202.50 and a silver cup for the leading driver.

Charles Mayhew scored 2,075 points and pulled down $80 and the second cup.

Morris O. Wilson of Fort Smith was third among the drivers, running up 1,094 points and winning $52.50.

W. B. Brashers of Springfield, Mo. was fourth with 994 points and $40.

Each event was three miles except the five-mile feature. Herman Mayhew won that and his brother was close behind for second. A strong wind made the lake rough, but there were no spills. However Herman Mayhew, in a "tune up" sprint this morning, was thrown into the lake when his boat capsized, but he was not injured.

the U. S. and Canadian governments surveys will have been completed and can talk turkey if they wish.

Original plans were for a 24-foot roadway, running from the state of Washington up through British Columbia and Yukon Territory to tie in with the Alaskan highways somewhere around Fairbanks. It will cost something like $20,000,000, with the U. S. putting up the bulk of the money. It's conceivable, now, that FDR might dip into that special emergency fund congress is giving him for defense purposes and have the road built pronto.

Alaska's air defense system is being built up rapidly; but experts say it won't really be complete until there is some overland connection between the territory and the homeland.

Peace --- She's Wonderful

YESTERDAY: Mrs. King accused the car with her screams after a turtle crawled over her. Denny recovers the pet, takes her to the doctor, and she is cured.

CHAPTER IV

CAROLE LOVE finished her grapefruit, came up to Denny's table with a piece of the yellow rind.

"Poor little thing," she said to Peace, as she looked at the still furiously swimming turtle. "Perpetual motion must be difficult. Shall I stuff in this peeling for Denny to rest on, until you can find some pebbles?"

Denny half rose. "Next time I travel, it will be without pests." Carole gave her honeyed curls an almost imperceptible toss towards Mrs. King. "One never knows what pests will attach themselves." Carole had not noticed that Rhoda had come in behind her.

"I hope I'm not intruding," Rhoda's tone was crisp, her nod a stiff smile, which froze when she discovered the turtle.

Denny, a bit flustered, began a formal introduction, then stopped abruptly as Carole passed on down the aisle.

"Humm, Rhoda's eyebrows went up. 'Boy meets glamor girl. Boy'll bear watching.'"

"Sssh!" Denny frowned at Peace. "Don't be silly."

Rhoda's heather suit didn't become her in the morning. Or maybe it was the mustard-colored blouse. "We'll be getting into Chicago soon. Will Bertrand meet you?"

"I wired him not to. I'm taking a taxi to his office. Aunt Tilly said it would save time. He's pretty busy."

"Are you fond of him, Rhoda?"

"Fond? What a way to put it. I haven't seen him since we were kids. He twisted my camera the wrong way and broke it, I remember. I hated him at the time."

"Chicago. A third of the way." Denny sighed. "I'll be thankful when I've changed trains safely. Why, where is Peace? That child can be in more places! Mind if I go to see what she's up to?"

Rhoda shrugged. "Run along. Personally, I can't say I'm sorry a third of this what did you call it—almost honeymoon—is over. Every time I manage to attract your attention I feel like saying, 'Remember me? I'm the girl you're engaged to!'"

Denny flushed, as he tried to laugh. Funny, he had never noticed how sharp her voice could be. She didn't look very well either, a bit sallow under the rouge of her peaked little face.

"You should have a swell time with your cousin," he said. "Most of the afternoon till midnight. But be sure you're on the right train at the stroke of 12, Cinderella."

"If we didn't have the infant along—! You don't mind, do you, Denny, if I have a little fun without her? I can't very well take you with us and stick her in a day nursery, or could we?"

"We could not. I promised Warren not to let her out of my sight, and I'd better be hunting her up right now." Denny cooed the slight hurt he felt. After all, Bertrand was Rhoda's cousin and it was natural she should want to see him. Hang it! He was her fiancé, wasn't he? Which one of them was she ashamed of?

THEY reached Chicago on the dot. Rhoda dashed ahead for a taxi, while Denny gathered up the baggage and Peace and installed them on the bus for the transfer to another station.

Carole Love was on the same bus. And the pest. Mrs. King might not be talking Carole's ear off about him, but she was certainly looking at him. Her sibilant whisper reached him clearly.

"See? They've split up. Don't dare be seen together. Wait till I get—!" The rest was lost to him.

The big bags had been previously checked through, but Denny carried the overnight cases to the parcel window to be free of them until the train was under way. Peace clung to the waterbottle. "Hand it over, honey, then we'll go home some fun." Peace drew back. "Darby and Joan wants some fun, Uncle Denny."

"But we can't carry that thing!" "Let her keep them." Carole's porter had brought her luggage to the same window. "Excuse me for the suggestion, Mr. Denny—"

"Dennis. Wayne Dennis."

"Mr. Dennis. But since we're all taking the same train tonight, why can't I take care of your—your little girl? Then you could spend the day with your friend. I do wish I'd dared offered before, but then I didn't know we were all going the same route. We'd have a swell time in Lincoln Park, hunting a raft for the turtles to rest on, wouldn't we, honey?"

Peace danced up and down, spilling water on Denny's gray trousers.

"That's terribly good of you,

Miss Love. But Miss Lowell is spending the afternoon with—with a relative. And as for this chicken, I don't dare leave her out of my sight."

Mrs. King hissed darkly. "What more do you want?" She tugged at Carole's elbow. "Come on. Let's get a paper. Maybe this one will have—"

Idiot that he was, he had let her walk off when he might have invited her to go to Lincoln Park with them. Now he had lost her. Perhaps it was better though. Rhoda would never have understood. He watched the two women stop at a magazine stand. He couldn't fathom them; one so antagonistic and suspicious, the other so sweet and co-operative. Co-operative, that was the word. He wished Rhoda would be a little more co-operative about the obligation he had undertaken. A man felt so lost with another man's child.

"Won't dare let you out of my sight," Peace was saying, as she hid the turtles behind her.

Denny hadn't noticed. "Come on, honey. The park sounds pretty good to me. There'll be a zoo and animals."

"Nelephants?"

"Nelephants and monkeys and buffaloes and popcorn and peanuts and everything."

THE blue waters of Lake Michigan glistened in the hot afternoon sun. Denny hadn't realized the zoo had so many exhibits. Peace was running him ragged.

He had been quarterback at college, but this 6-year-old had tucked him out. He found a shady tree, stuck the waterbottle he'd lugged all the afternoon under it, and said, "Now, we'll take a nap." To his astonishment Peace obeyed, lying on the newspaper he spread for her.

He awoke with a guilty start. Forty winks? Terror smote him, till he saw her buff ruff a few yards away. Denny sat up. What was she doing, crawling on her hands and knees? He went forward to investigate.

"It's Joany, Uncle Denny," Peace explained without looking up. "Me took her out to do her exercises in the sun, and she runned away."

Relief that only the turtle was lost set him to helping in the search, though the little beast was probably in Kansas City by now. "Yoo-hoo! I know where she is!" Denny heard a girl's voice call from behind a bush. And when she straightened up, he saw that it was Carole.

YESTERDAY: Upon arrival in Chicago, Rhoda goes to see her cousin, Bertrand, leaving Denny to take care of the pet. They go to the park and Denny is worn out trying to keep up with the child. He takes a nap, awakens to find Peace hunting a lost turtle. Carole calls them.

CHAPTER V

"H'LO!" They said it together, and both laughed.

Carole, he thought, seemed a trifle embarrassed. "You'll think I've been following you," she said, "and I have. Partly to get away from that ridiculous King woman and partly for the fresh air. Trains are so tiresome, don't you think?"

"Where's Joany?" Peace demanded, sitting back on her heels.

"I think she smells ant eggs. I'll bet if we hunt up the nearest pet store, where they sell them, we'll find her."

Denny gave her a grateful smile. "Miss Love is right. Trot back for the water bottle and we'll go see." And when Peace had gone, he added, "What a good idea. We could never find a turtle in this grass. But what if they don't have Mexican turtles at the pet shop?"

"They will."

They found a taxi and, eventually, after a sightseeing trip of the residential district, the slums, the stockyards, and finally the business section, they discovered a pet store. Had the clerk seen a small turtle, like the one in the bottle, sniffing around the ant eggs? Carole asked with a wink. Why, come to think of it, he had. He'd go fetch it.

Peace hopped up and down, spilling just a little more liquid, slightly grapefruit and muddy from park stones, on Denny's not what they used to be trousers. She took the new wringer in her hand. "Joany's shrunk," she said. "Wait till you feed her!" Denny bought enough ant eggs to supply all Mexico. Meanwhile, Carole selected a water plant. "Darby and Joan's vitamins. Like spinach," she explained.

Would Miss Love have some spinach with them? Denny asked. She was sorry, Carole said, but she'd promised Mrs. King to go to a movie with her, and she was already late. "That child is tired. What are you going to do until train time?"

"Oh, we'll get a bite and go back to the station. The train will be made up early, and I'll put her to bed."

CAROLE was gone, and Denny looked forward to a long, dull evening before Rhoda returned. He took Peace into a restaurant and ordered her chicken sandwich for both of them. She sat happily in front of him, her paws on the table beside her, now boun-
